Money appropriated for improvements on the island of Maui has not been coming through fast enough since the adjournment of the Legislature, so Senator W. J. Coelho, the Iao Valley hustler, has come down to boost things along. Coelho was in conference with the Governor yesterday for some time, and it is understood that the financial situation was pretty thoroughly discussed.

Maui worked hard for what she got in the way of appropriations out of the last Legislature, and she is determined that nothing shall now be lost because of failure to demand her own.

Some of the wharf improvements, which were provided for, must be undertaken at once, or they will not be completed before the advent of the winter season. This was one of the reasons for Coelho's visit, and the Maui statesman will camp here until he sees the things for which he worked well under way.

CONSPIRACY TRIAL

AGAIN CONTINUED

The conspiracy case in Judge De Bolt's court goes over until Monday morning at 10 o'clock, when another attempt will be made to get a jury out of the third special venire of twenty-six talesmen, summoned by the Court.

Attorney Lightfoot was opposed to the continuance on account of the fact that it would compel him to appear as counsel for the men charged with riot, which case is set down for trial before Judge Robinson. As the second special venire was exhausted however, and there would be only one day in the week left for trial, the Judge ordered the case continued until Monday.

On arrival at Waianae the Chief was informed by telephone that the trunk had been located at the Honolulu depot. No one seems to know how the box got there, but the fact remains that it was the missing one. Another peculiar fact in connection with the case is that the trunk was found to only contain some old books and a few articles that by no possible stretch of the imagination could be valued at the sum that was claimed by the Japanese. Meanwhile the agent is relieved of having to pay for the "lost" trunk, and somebody's scheme of graft has failed to make good.

Whether the man who took the trunk became scared when he saw that Leal was looking into the matter, or whether it was all a skin game to get paid $97 for a trunk that never was really missing is hard to say.
